CALVIN W PRICE, EDITOR

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13 1934

Last week J. J. Loury, of Minnehaha Springs, loaned me a scrap book made by his father, the late James W. Loury, nearly fifty years ago. I am finding good reading in it. No piece interests me more than the notice to road hands by Mr. Loury himself published in the Pocahontas Times during the road season of 1887. For information of the young reader, I will say that in those days public roads were kept up by forced labor, every able bodied man from eighteen years up was required to work four days each year or send a hand for that length of time. The roads were laid off in sections and given into charge of an overseer who was called surveyor. Mr. Loury was surveyor of the roads around Huntersville. Of the men mentioned in the notice only one is alive today, Michell D. McLaughlin, of Maxwelton. Here is the notice.

NOTICE TO ROAD HANDS

I want all the persons under my control to come and work the road for me just as soon as they can do any good at digging on the road. I will furnish them their tools and give them their dinner. The county court put me in too late to dig or plow, but oh! I have got along right so far. M. D. McLaughlin and Mr. Roberts on helped plow as far as I live, and do please come on, those that are behind.

Oh! I have plenty of help so far. Mr. J. W. Warwick paid me in sugar and flour for his time and Mr. Rucker hauled me wood to cook with at home so I and my boys could work out the lawyer's time.

The printer is in advance with his four days.

S. W. Miller, Sam Freeman and Alex. McChesney, (colored), are in advance with their first two days. They furnished me sugar, coffee, tools to work with and hauling logs for foot bridge with A Barlow's team.

So far as Dr. Patterson is concerned, just as soon as I get my little bit of grass cut, I and my boys are going to work his time out.

As for Mr. Z. T. Webb, he told me he would work four days or make a path around the long fording if it took eight days, and the way he and his son are cutting timber I don't know whether it will be a path or turnpike.

Mr. Cornelius Perry told me if I would make a motion before the county court and get him on my road that he would furnish oxen and plow and plow for me next spring, and do all he could this July and August.

Mr. M. D. McGlaughlin told me he would plow for me next April from my house to Mr. Jas. P. McComb's.

JAS. W. LOURY, Surveyor.

This is campaign year, and naturally there is considerable sniping along the line by the outs against the ins. The new national chairman for the republicans, Mr Fletcher, has been spreading around that the national debt will be increased maybe by ten billion dollars. In my free and easy way with other people's money I was about to arise and say what of it? It is spent to save lives and to put some value back into American farms and business out of which some hundred of billions of dollars was deflated during the late lamented republican administration. Before I got around to count up the actual depletion in values and write and print such a roar back, the Hon. Henry Morganthau, Secretary of the Treasury, steps out and in great speech that ought to hold the gent awhile. He tells him to keep his shirt on; to quit shaking with aspenitis like the poor rich lady in the funny papers; that when depression is out and over the increase in public debt will look more like a half billion than ten billion. All this too, in the face of the great flow of public money pouring out for mercy sake to depression and crowth sufferer. Here is the recapitulation of Mr Morganthau's remarks:

"The gross increase in the National debt between March 4, 1933, and June 30, 1934, amounted in round numbers to $6,000,000. Against this we can offset, either now or ultimately, the following assets: (1) An increase in the Treasury's cash balance $1,000,000,000. (2) The 'profit' of $2,800,000,000 resulting in the reduction of the gold content of the dollar, practically all held in the form of gold. (3) Increase in net assets of the agencies wholly owned and financed by the Government, amounting on June 30, 1934, to $1,095,000,000. This is wholly aside from an increase in the capital investment of the Government in agencies which are partialy financed by funds raised outside of the Treasury."

There is a story going around that I consider a good one whether true or not. A big lumber operator was shown in to see President Roosevelt the other week. The two big men got on famously. The President disclosed to the lumberman that he knew much about his operation: how great an acreage he had; what he had cut over; how much stumpage he had left; the amount of lumber he had on sticks, and other things. Lastly, the President said for him to go to work when he got home; if the operator could not sell his lumber, he, the President would. Before I heard the story, I saw in the papers where overtures to the striking employees of the lumberman had been made in the matter of increased wages and and more hours per week.

I heard tell another tale out of Washington some months since. Down in Charleston a young married couple bought a house and lot on the excitement plan several years ago. The man had a good job with a great industrial plant, and buying a home looked like the thrifty thing to do. Then came along 1929, when the bottom dropped out. He was a hustler, and what with odd jobs, he never failed on interest and installment payments until the spring of 1934, when all the money he could raise paid no more than the interest.

In the years of depression following 1929, the real estate company that sold the home to the young people hit the ceiling and had to sell out. A great city bank in another state took over the mortgage notes due the company.

As the date for the payment of installment and interest came in sight, there was only enough money to meet the interest payment. And this money was in hand only by selling the refrigerator. There had been a sickness in the little family during the winter.

A money order for the interest was bought, and with it was sent a letter explaining circumstances and asking an extension of time on the installment note coming due next month. In the course of a few days the city bank returned the money order with a curt letter to the effect that the time of payment would not be extended; the contract provided that the failure to meet one note brought all deferred due, and if the installment was not met, proceedings would be started for a closing out sale.

There was no help or hope in sight, other than appeal direct to the President, so Mr. Roosevelt got a letter. In the course of a couple of weeks the young householders received a copy of a letter the Reconstruction Finance Commission had written to the great city bank. It was initialed "F. D. R." This letter detailed the fact they had received the bank's letter to the young West Virginians, whom they had threatened to dispossess; investigation had shown he had always been able to meet promptly and fully his installments up to this time; he had been burdened by sickness; he had sold furniture to pay interest; this was no time to distress such a man. However, if the bank would insist in carrying out the letter of the contract and did proceed against the debtor, be pleased to take notice that when they did so, their own note for $575,000 with Reconstruction Finance Commission, would become due and payable and steps would be taken to see that it was paid in full and at once.

All of which reads not unlike the parable of the unjust steward who was forgiven his tens of thousands by a merciful master, but who proceeded to throw his own debtor into prison for the paultry sum of seventeen dollars.

"The President is very much interested in the development of water power for huge dams," said Senator Daniel O. Hastings, chairman of the Republican Senatorial campaign committee, in a speech at Bridgeport, Conn. "The East will pay for this new and latest inconsistency in the New Deal's program, just as it must pay for alleged benefits to farmers of the West and South, benefits which in many instances are not wanted. The people of New England will not submit without complaint and protest to the effort to tax them for the benefit of people in other States."

Apart from the attempt to arouse sectional feeling at a time when public spirited citizens everywhere are pulling together for national recovery the real significance of this partisan outburst is that Connecticut is a leading industrial State and Delaware, which Mr Hastings represents in the Senate, is another. Hence the speaker and every adult member of his audience was conscious of the fact that hundreds of their factories were either closed down entirely before the advent of the New Deal or they were working with skeleton crews. And very largely because the farmers and the people in the farming communities, including those in the West and South, being unable to dispose of their products at cost, could no longer buy the products of Connecticut and Delaware.

Mr. Hastings would have as much difficulty proving his point that "benefits in many instances are not wanted" as in establishing the accuracy of his assertion that development of water power is the slightest degree inconsistent with Franklin D Roosevelt's record as Governor of New York and as a candidate for the Presidency.

Here's how they used to throw the bull in the way of tall stories back in the late eighties. The subject under consideration was mosquitoes in Mississippi:

"Now, sir, answer me truthfully. Do you believe that six of your biggest mosquitoes could kill a mule if he was tied up out here?"

He looked at me in amazement for for a minute, and then went to the door and beckoned in the man sitting on a box and watching the horses. When the man came in the native said:

"William, you remember that air roan mule o' yours?"

"I reckon."

"In perfect health, wasn't he?"

"He was."

"Could run like a deer and kick like a saw log?"

"He could."

"And he was all alone in a ten-acre lot, William?"

"He was."

"And two of them mud swamp 'skeeters got arter him one morning and run him down and killed him, and devoured both hams and sucked every drop of blood in his body?—William, speak up!"

"Stranger, if they didn't then I hope to be chawed to rags," said William, and he said it exactly like a man who would't have allowed there were two 'skeeters if he had been earnestly convinced of the fact. He walked out doors, and a deep silence fell upon us two, broken only after a long interval by the native saying:

"I've allus kinder suspected that them two 'skeeters had assistance from a hoss fly, but I can't prove it. I kinder think the hoss fly field him down while the murder was committed."

Came a Friday, and I was due in Charleston at the noon hour to talk for half an hour to the Rotary Club on Cranberry Glades. I find I cannot talk interestingly for more than ten minutes, nor can I dish out informative facts under an hour.

I fear I did worse than usual, and my best is plenty bad. The polite metropolitans sat patiently through the ordeal; they spoke nice to me when time was up. That was good and considerate of them. City people have nice ways, whether they mean any thing or nothing. I remember barnstorming in a big town once, and the auditors were fulsome in their comments on my effort. I beg leave to make note I have never yet been asked back. I talked to a farm congregation soon after; nobody said beans when I got through, but I get bids to come back there regularly. A farm wife once upbraided her husband that in all their married fifty years, he had not spoken one word of praise to her. The surprised kind hearted old sinner could only reply that in all that time he had never complained.

A trip to Charleston is always worth while. There is the capitol as the main show place. Then as capital of the Commonwealth the business of the city is with the people of the whole state. They know how to welcome you and make you feel at home.

That capitol is just about the finest structure of its kind in all these United States. It cost close to ten millions of dollars, and it is worth all it cost, as the young engaged lady said of the tunnel that gave a bit of privacy on a long railway trip. By the way, Governor Kump finished paying for that capitol the other day too,

Like those who beefed about the breaking of the alabaster box with precious ointment on the Master, there are those who ask why was not the money expended on that structure given for the poor. I can say while the capitol was building, greater sums than what the capitol cost were doled out to the poor by the County Courts and we still have them with us. We could have dished out those ten millions, had no state house, and never helped the poor much.

Through the great marble corridors of the magnificient and well apportioned edifice. I walked with a taxpayer paying his first visit the other day. He is on the tax books for an assessed valuation of about fifteen thousand dollars. He figured he had something like forty dollars in that building, and he expressed him self as thoroughly satisfied with what this part of his tax payment went to buy.

The West Virginia Capitol is the masterpiece of that master architect, Cass Gilbert. He built it and died. Limestone from Indiana, marble from Georgia, steel from Pittsburgh, volcano pumice from Italy, the skill of craftsmen, the experience of the ages—all this and more entered in to make up the great structure. Why not say the hand of God worked through the mind of man—divine inspiration, if you please.

Years ago a specialist in economics said to me he had about come to the conclusion that America was fast reaching the point of development when great public buildings, roads and what not could be built profitably even if destroyed before ever used. In other words so much of the cost of great building goes for labor and material, to immediately flow into the channels of commerce that what ever came out of the expenditures was on the clear. Had he lived to see the disastrous outcome of the wholesale closing down of industry following 1929, he would have been convinced he was thinking on the right track. This thing we call business is such a close knit, inter woven fabric: you can hardly ripout a single thread without affecting the whole cloth.

General Manager Robert Smith took me through the modern printing plant of the Charleston Gazette. Thirty years ago Mr Smith entered the service of the Gazette as a news boy; he stayed by them; they stayed by him; today he is the general manager of the leading paper of the State. Modern in all details, the equipment is that of a great factory rather than what is implied by the term "printing office."

Coming back up the valley, time taken to inspect the modern locks and dam at Marmet. This is one of the improvements to give the Kanawha River a nine foot depth at all stages of water for navigation. It is a series of great iron rollers, each 100 feet long and 20 feet in diameter. A twenty foot head of water is maintained at all times. As the river raises or falls, the great rollers are raised or lowered to release or hold the water required. Electricity is the power used. There are two great locks, patterned after those of the Panama Canal. I was wondering how that twenty foot head of water was let through the gates without tearing out the works. A polite attendant said that matter was attended to by a system of valves, which eases water in to lower ships that come down and raise those which come up stream. Workmen are preparing the place for a big power plant to make electricity from the water power. The power company will pay the government something like $100 a day for the use of water.

About 1100 cattle from drought stricken western pastures are now being pastured by stockmen of Pendleton on their lands in that county and in the "Sinks" section of this county. The cattle delivered about August 1, pitifully thin and exhausted from months of starvation, lack of water and many days spent in transit, have made wonderful improvement and will be in good condition for slaughter late in November.—Randolph Review.
